Randy began his legal career in the early 1980s as a law clerk for the firm then known as the DeParcq firm, a pioneer and powerhouse in the representation of railroad workers under the Federal Employers Liability Act (FELA). Today, Randy's clients include railroad workers covered under the FELA, National Football League players and other professional athletes in worker's compensation claims. He also represents people who have been seriously injured or whose family members have been killed as a result of the wrongful conduct of others, individuals or corporations.
